MATTERS OF RECORD

If you are injured as the result of another person's negligence, it is important to document your injuries and treatment. Failure to do so can jeopardize your ability to receive full compensation for the injuries you sustained. For this reason, it is a good idea to keep a journal of the pain and discomfort that an injury causes during the days following its occurrence. This is especially important in cases where the injured person suffers from pain, anxiety, or loss of sleep, which cannot be detected by visual inspection. Taking notes of injuries may help health care professionals diagnose delayed symptoms. This information will also become part of the medical records that will later provide evidence in the case.

The details of any incident of personal injury are vital in the course of any legal action taken. If you have been injured and need legal advice, call us to schedule a free initial consultation. Personal injury cases are our specialty and for your convenience, we offer hospital and in-home visits.

HINT: After an accident, take the time to write down everything that you remember about the event to guard against forgetting important details.
